

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES

Jeevan Baniya

baniyajeevan@hotmail.com

Jeevan Baniya is a Research Fellow at the Democracy and Social Movement Institute at Sungkonghoe University and a part-time researcher at the Seoul branch of the Nautilus Institute. Hailing from Nepal, Baniya has an M.A. in NGO Studies from Ajou University and has written extensively about the role of civil society and its role in peace building and conflict resolution in his native country. Other research interests include comparative studies between Korean and Nepali NGOs and the changing nature of democracy in Nepal.

Jason J. Blazevic

blazjaso@isu.edu

Jason J. Blazevic is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Political Science, Idaho State University. Jason holds graduate degrees from Washington State University (M.A. American Diplomatic History, Modern East Asia), Idaho State University (M.A. International Relations), and Northern Arizona University (B.S. History). Research fields include public administration; American government; International Relations; Chinese, American and Japanese energy policies; modern Chinese and Japanese political history; and foreign policy. Jason is currently an instructor of courses such as Introduction to American Government, Introduction to International Relations and East Asian Politics. Jason has published articles titled “Oil, the United States and China” in the March 2007 issue of The Journal of Social Science published by International Christian University, Tokyo, Japan and “Japan and the East China Sea: Realism, Policy and the Security Dilemma” in the spring 2009 issue of Stanford Journal of East Asian Affairs published by Stanford University, Stanford, USA.

Andrew Calhoun

redliondrew@yahoo.ca

Andrew Calhoun is a Ph.D. candidate at Yonsei University's Graduate School of International Studies and specializes in contemporary Korean issues as well as US-Korea diplomatic history. He is also currently a lecturer at Korea Aerospace University where he teaches English media and cultural understanding.

Hyo Joon Chang

hyojoonchang@gmail.com

Hyo Joon Chang is a graduate student at Yonsei University's Graduate School of International Studies in South Korea, studying foreign policy and international security. His academic interests include the global effort to promote peace and security, especially in terms of international peace operations, in addition to Korean and American foreign policy. He has interned at the United Nations Division in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade in Korea, and the Institute of Foreign Affairs and National Security. His piece "Can the Lee Administration Make a Difference in Promoting North Korean Human Rights?" was published in the Korean Policy Review at Harvard University in 2008. He received his B.A. from Yonsei University in Western History, Political Science and Diplomacy.

Eun-il Cho

eunilcho@gmail.com

Eun-il Cho is a student at Yonsei University's Graduate School of International Studies focusing on International Cooperation. Her research interests include international security and foreign policy within the Asia-Pacific region. She has interned at the New York Times Tokyo Bureau, in addition to working as a liaison for the Finance Minister of Japan during the 2008 ASEM Finance Ministers' Meeting. She graduated from Waseda University in 2008 with a Bachelor of Arts in Political Science.

Renate Clasen

renateclasen@googlemail.com

After completing her Magister in sociology (subsidiary subjects: philosophy and economic policy) at Rheinische Friedrich-Wilhelms-University in Bonn (Germany) with a thesis about education and economy in South Korea, the author freelanced for two years as a translator of Korean books for two German comic-book publishers. She is currently teaching Korean history, culture, and economy as a fulltime lecturer at Myongji University while pursuing a Ph.D. in Korean Studies at Yonsei GSIS. Her fields of interest are educational development and cultural exchange.

Kent A. Davy

kentdavy@gmail.com

Kent Davy has degrees in Philosophy (Cornell University, A.B.) and Law (The Harvard Law School, J.D.) He practiced law in New York and Seoul for 25 years and also developed real estate in Korea, where he has lived for 14 years. He currently is engaged in graduate work in Korean Studies at Yonsei University's Graduate School of International Studies. (In the interest of full disclosure, he wishes to note that he is currently studying Korean religion with Professor Vermeersch; the volume under review is not a part of the syllabus, however.)

Timothy Gitzen

tgitzen@yonsei.ac.kr

Timothy Gitzen is a student at Yonsei University's Graduate School of International Studies in the Korean Studies Program, and focuses primarily on the interaction of popular culture and media industries and the changing world markets in East Asia. He has done significant research on Korean and Japanese popular music cultures and markets, focusing on production, distribution and consumption. In addition, he worked as Assistant House Manager for nearly four years at the Schwartz Center for Performing Arts in Atlanta. He received his Bachelor's degree at Emory University in both Japanese and Religion, and is currently the Editor in Chief of Papers, Essays and Reviews, the Yonsei Journal of International Studies.

H.E. Dr. Seung-Soo Han

Prime Minister, The Republic of Korea

Prime Minister Han was educated at Yonsei University and Seoul National University, and received his doctorate at the University of York in the United Kingdom in 1968. He was a Fulbright Scholar at Harvard University, a visiting Professor at the University of Tokyo, taught economics at the University of York, University of Cambridge, and Emmanuel University, in addition to serving as a Professor of Economics at Seoul National University. Prior to becoming Prime Minister of South Korea, he served on the National Assembly, Chairman of the Korean Trade Commission, Ambassador to the United States, Chief of Staff to Former Korean President Young Sam Kim, Minister of Foreign Affairs and Trade, Minister of Finance and Economics, Deputy Prime Minister, and President of the fifty-sixth session of the United Nations General Assembly. Prime Minister Han also was a Distinguished Visiting Professor at the Graduate School of International Studies at Yonsei University.

Yusuke Imanishi

ykb.imanishi@gmail.com

Yusuke Imanishi received his B.A. in Policy Studies from Kwansai Gakuin University in 2007. While he was an undergraduate student at Kwansai Gakuin University, he studied for one year at Emory University in the US as an exchange student. He went to Osaka University, where he received his M.A. in English Linguistics in Spring 2009. In Fall 2009, he will start his doctoral studies at the Department of Linguistics and Philosophy of Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT). His research interests include generative syntax, comparative syntax, Japanese syntax, and dialectal variations of syntax. He is also interested in the preservation of endangered languages.

Seung-eun Lee

kleinai@naver.com

Seung-eun Lee is a teaching assistant in Chinese at the Cyber Hankuk University of Foreign Studies (CUFS) in Seoul, South Korea. She received her M.A. degree in the Department of Chinese Studies from the Graduate School of International and Area Studies at Hankuk University of Foreign Studies (HUFS) in August 2008. She also majored in Chinese as an undergraduate at HUFS. She has worked as a Chinese interpreter for state organizations and as a Chinese teacher at Daewon Foreign Language High School in Seoul. At the moment she is preparing to research abroad for a doctorate in Chinese Studies in the fields of society and culture. Her research interests concern social changes and modernity at both the macro level and the micro level of everyday life in Northeast Asian societies, especially in China, in regional and global contexts.

Junjie Luo

jluo3@illinois.edu

Junjie Luo is a Ph.D. candidate in the Program in Comparative and World Literature at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. His research interests include classical and modern Chinese fiction, representations of China in world literatures, psychoanalytical theory, postcolonial theory, and translation theory. He is now working on his Ph.D. dissertation on the representation of desire in Jin Ping Mei.

Nicolas Marceau

nicolas.marceau@alumni.utoronto.ca

Nicolas is currently a second semester student at Yonsei GSIS focusing on Korean Studies. Having received his Bachelor's Degree from the University of Toronto in 2006, he has been concentrating on Korean language study for the past two years.

Nicolas has been involved with and participated in the Yonsei-Korea Foundation Korean Studies Forum. His research interests are primarily concentrated around labor union formation and developmental dictatorships in Korea, but extend to the impact of video-game culture in North-East Asia, focusing on Korea and Japan.

Michael A. Panton

mapanton@syr.edu

Michael received his B.S., Suma cum Laude, from Excelsior College in 2001. He then moved on to receive his J.D. from Syracuse University College of Law in 2005, followed by his M.A., Honors First Class in International Studies from The University of Sydney in 2007 and his L.L.M. with Distinction in Corporate and Financial Law from The University of Hong Kong in 2008. He is currently a Ph.D. student at the Lee Kuan Yew School of Public Policy at the National University of Singapore focusing on American hegemonic influence in post-war Asia and maintaining the balance in Sino-Japanese relations.

Pieter E. Stek

pieter@yonsei.ac.kr

Pieter Stek hails from the Netherlands but considers Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia to be his hometown. He is currently a student of Yonsei University's Graduate School of International Studies majoring in International Cooperation and recently completed an internship at Malaysiakini.com, an Internet newspaper based in Kuala Lumpur. He is also the President of the Yonsei GSIS Debate Society, a project he initially founded with special assistance from the Dean of the GSIS last year.

Michal Vodrazka

vodrazka_michal@yahoo.co.uk

Michal Vodrazka studied international and EU law at the University of West Bohemia in the Czech Republic. He then worked in the International Relations department of the Czech Ministry of Finance, and is now a graduate student at KDI School of Public Policy and Management in Seoul, focusing on international relations and political economy.