

MEET

THE CONTRIBUTORS

JOSIAH MARINEAU

University of Texas-Austin

army_medic99@yahoo.com

Josiah Marineau is a PhD student in Government at the University of Texas-Austin. He was recently awarded his MA in International Studies at the Josef Korbel School of International Studies, University of Denver, and received his BA in Political Science at the University of Alaska-Fairbanks. In addition to his interest in the political thought of the Middle East, he studies United Nations state-building missions in Africa.

SYED MOHAMMED AD'HA ALJUNIED

Nanyang Technological University,

The S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies

adhawa@yahoo.co.uk

Syed Mohammed Ad'ha Aljunied holds a master's degree from the Australian National University. He is currently working as a personal research analyst at the S. Rajaratnam School of International Studies. His research interests are historical and contemporary politics of Southeast Asia, covering international relations, governance, ethnicity and religion.

ERICA ROSENFELD

University of Denver,

Josef Korbel School of International Studies

Erica Rosenfield is pursuing a master's degree in International Studies with concentrations in Human Rights and Policy Analysis at the Josef Korbel School of International Studies at the University of Denver. She completed her undergraduate degree at the University of Toronto with a double major in International Relations and European Studies. She is originally from Toronto, and has pursued her passion for human rights by working for the Government of Ontario's Ministry of Citizenship and Immigration in Toronto and the Mental Disability Advocacy Center in Budapest, Hungary.

LUIS BOTELLA

Yonsei University,
Graduate School of International Studies
501luis@gmail.com

Luis Botella received his BA in History from the University of Malaga, Spain, in 2007, dividing his attention between archaeology and modern historiography. In that time, he took part in the research group “Human Territory in Rio Grande” and other archaeological activities such as the geophysical survey of the archaeological site “Castillo del Alcorrin” in collaboration with the German Institute of Archaeology, and the excavation of “Castanheiro do Vento” in Portugal. After graduation, he received a scholarship from the National Institute for International Education Development to complete his master’s degree in Korean Studies at Yonsei Graduate School of International Studies. Luis has focused his MA studies on the development of nationalistic discourse and the use of archaeological data in Korea during the Park Chung Hee regime. He is currently in his fourth semester and is writing a dissertation on the role of the National Museum of Korea in constructing a national discourse during the Park administration.

JOSEPH MONDELLO

Yonsei University,
Graduate School of International Studies

Joe Mondello is an American resident of South Korea, where he works for an international financial services firm. Joe is a student at Yonsei University’s Graduate School of International Studies. Joe’s other writings on a wide range of topics can be found at <http://joshinggnome.wordpress.com>.

ODETTE MUCHA

Tufts University,
Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy

Odetta Mucha is a graduate student at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy, where she is focusing her studies on International Environmental Policy and International Business Relations. She was recently selected as a Presidential Management Fellow and following graduation, she will work at the US Executive Office of the President in the Office of Management and Budget, where she will analyze federal transportation policy. Prior to the Fletcher School, she worked as the Sierra Club’s Field Media Coordinator and as a field organizer for Green Corps. She completed her BA in Government and French at Cornell University.

KIMBERLY LYON

Tufts University,
Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy

A native of Jamaica, Kimberly Lyon is a second year master's candidate at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy where she is focusing on Development Economics and International Environment & Resource Policy. She attended Rollins College in Winter Park, Florida, where she received her BA in International Relations. Prior to attending the Fletcher School, Kimberly served as Technical Advisor to the Minister in the Ministry of Finance & the Public Service of Jamaica. She is currently interning with the United Nations Environmental Programme on their project Reducing Pesticides Run-Off to the Caribbean Sea, an initiative focused on sustainable agricultural practices in the Wider Caribbean Basin.

HANNAH SKELLY

Tufts University,
Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy

Hannah Skelly is completing her master's degree at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy with concentrations in Development Economics and Political Theory. Her academic interests also include state-civil society relations, international regimes and the diffusion of international norms. Following graduation, she will work with the Education Assessment team at the American Institutes for Research. Prior to her graduate studies, she served as a coordinator for educational programs at the Southern Center for International Studies. She obtained her BA in History and International Studies from Emory University.

BAOFENG DONG

University of Oregon

Baofeng Dong is currently a graduate student in the Asian Studies program at the University of Oregon. His research interests include the Chinese economy, China's land tenure system and land rental markets since 1978. He is particularly interested in the role played by local governments in promoting a uniquely Chinese version of the market economy. Baofeng has done research on the driving force and economic incentives behind the emergence of land rental markets in Zhejiang province. Besides studying and researching, Baofeng also teaches Chinese to American college students. Baofeng graduated from the Harbin Institute of Technology with a bachelor's degree in Optoelectronic Information Engineering.

HOLLY STEPHENS

Yonsei University,
Graduate School of International Studies

h.j.stephens@yonsei.ac.kr

Holly Stephens received her bachelor's degree from the University of Durham in Japanese Studies. After a stint working for an international cosmetics company in London, she received a scholarship from the Leverhulme Trust which allowed her to continue her studies. She is now an MA candidate in Korean Studies at Yonsei University's Graduate School of International Studies. Her research interests include the political economy of development and the history of the Korean economy.

KYLE DEROSA

Yonsei University,
Graduate School of International Studies

k.j.derosa@gmail.com

Having obtained his undergraduate degree in Quantitative Economics from Tufts University, Kyle DeRosa went on to pursue a career in tertiary education business strategy and technology implementation, working with NACUBO, Harvard, MIT, Northeastern and Tulane University. His research has spanned the role of culture in film festivals, the motivation behind university resource allocation and issues related to food security and resilience. Kyle is the sitting Editor in Chief of Yonsei's NOVAsia magazine and co-manages the Yonsei GSIS Debate Society.

ANGELA CHANGJIN LEE

Yonsei University,
Graduate School of International Studies

a.cj.lee@gmail.com

Angela C. Lee is currently a master's degree candidate in the Program for International Cooperation at Yonsei Graduate School of International Studies, focusing on international law and organizations. Her master's thesis studied the relationship between international and domestic law in the context of international treaties and their supervisory mechanisms. Educated in England and Korea, she received her BA in International Studies from Ewha Womans University in Korea. As an undergraduate student, she worked as an intern at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and Trade of the Republic of Korea and the Asian Development Bank. Also a certified translator, Angela has volunteered for World Vision as a translator for over five years. Since 2009, she has been working at a law firm in Korea as a paralegal.